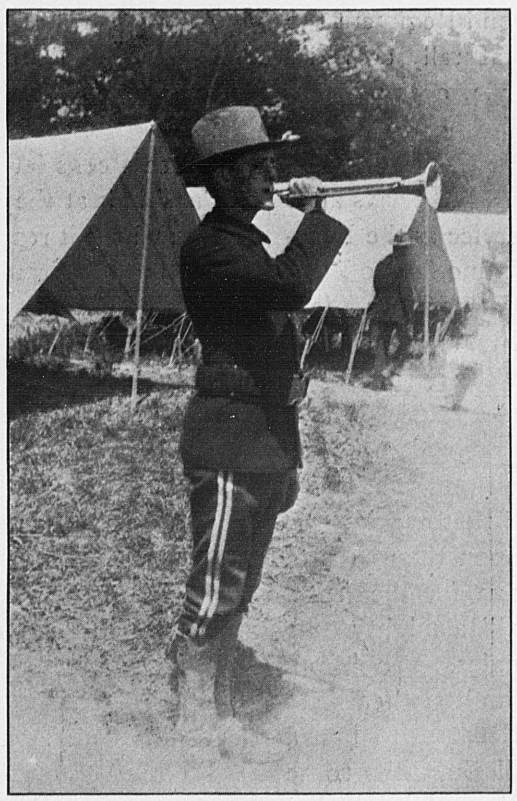
THE SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY

NEW ADDITIONS TO THEIR ARMORY

THE Board of Trustees of the Armory Fund of the Second Regiment Infantry, National Guard of Pennsylvania, has contracted for the building of the Administration building to a height of one story and placing over it a temporary roof and for extending the steam-heating plant. It is expected that $16,000 will cover this part of the building. If $20,000 additional can be obtained it is believed that the Administration building will be completed to a height of three stories so as to be fully commensurate with the needs of the Regiment and a stately building among the many fine edifices which adorn Broad Street. The drill hall, which has been in use since 1896, is the largest in the State, and compares favorably in size with those of the armories in New York city. The convenient location of this armory on North Broad Street has been found to be of great advantage in attracting young men, not only from the city but from many suburban points.

THE REGIMENT'S HISTORY.

The present Second Regiment Infantry, National Guard of Pennsylvania, had its inception just 60 years ago, December 11, 1840. On October 3d of that year a number of the male residents of the then District of Spring Garden met to organize a company of militia infantry. The project was well received, a committee appointed, subsequent meetings held, and, on December 11th, the Company was permanently organized as the "National Guards." On January 7, 1841, the first election for officers was held, resulting in the choice of Thomas Tustin for Captain; George Wolff, First Lieutenant; John Mutteys, Second Licutenant, and S. Ovenshine, Third Lieutenant. At that time the militia was composed of independent companies, each wearing a distinctive uniform. These companies were considered as parts of provisional regiments, and the National Guards were attached to the First Regiment, First Brigade, First Division of Militia. On February 22, 1841, the Guards made their first street parade, 48 muskets being in line. The uniform worn was a blue cloth double-breasted frock coat, with lacings of white cassimere, collar and skirt trimmed with white braid, silver stars on back of collar and on turn-up of the skirts. The trousers were of sky-blue cassimere, with white stripes, one and one-half inches in width. The headpiece, of the pattern commonly denominated as a "tar bucket," was of blue cloth, a silver "glory" in front containing a brass eagle, and the visor was silver plated. A plume of white vulture feathers surmounted the hat.



REVEILLE!
A New Era for our Guard.

Changes Commanders and Uniforms.

During 1841 the Guards made in all ten parades, averaging fifty muskets each, a strong turnout in those days. Among the notable events were escorting, in conjunction with the "State Fencibles," the "National Grays" upon the return of the latter from Washington, D. C., where they had been attending the inauguration of President William Henry Harrison. A month later the Company took part in the funeral parade in memory of the President, returning from which General Simon Cameron presented the Company with a handsome silk ensign. In 1844 the Company was on duty in May and July during the riots that prevailed in the city at that time, and did efficient service. Shortly after the riot service Captain Tustin resigned and was succeeded by Stephen B. Kingston, who, in turn, gave way in 1846 to Peter Lyle, one of the original members of the Company, and at the time of his elevation to the Captaincy its Orderly Sergeant. Captain Lyle at once took hold with a vigorous hand, and under his administration the Company rapidly forged to the front, becoming the "crack" organization, a position it held up to its entry into the civil war. In 1846 Captain Lyle tendered the services of the Company to the Government for the Mexican war, but, the quota being filled, the offer was declined. The next important service was the "California House" riots in 1849, the Company remaining on duty for several days and completely ruining the uniforms they then wore. This uniform was of the United States army pattern of that period, and was forced upon the several companies by General Cadwalader, who withheld certain moneys due the soldiers unless they equipped in what was derisively called the "State harness." It was at once decided to re-equip, and a very handsome uniform was adopted, consisting of "shad-belly" coats of pearl-colored cloth, embroidered with gold and white, blue trousers with white stripes. A shako of black lynx skin, having a gold bullion tassel in front, surmounting this uniform, which was completed with body and waist belts of white patent leather.

The Guards Erect an Armory.

From the adoption of the new uniform the progress of the "Guards" was rapid. Increased membership enabled the corps to parade as a battalion on several occasions, and finally so strong and so popular had the Company become that it was decided to purchase ground and erect an armory building commensurate with its needs. Originally the command had its headquarters at Broad and Vine Streets. In 1845 the Company moved to Eighth and Willow Streets, and in 1852 to Chestnut Street, above Fifth, where a portion of the large iron building owned by Mr. William M. Swain was occupied. Here the Company remained for two years, when, on September 14, 1854, the building was burned down, and the Guards lost all their arms, equipments, records, flags, etc.; in fact, nothing was left them. A new headquarters was at once secured on Market Street, near Eighteenth, where the Company remained but one month, and then located in Military Hall, on Library Street. It was while in the latter location that it was decided to build and own its armory, and as a first step the company was incorporated as the "Infantry Corps of the National Guards of the City of Philadelphia," the act being granted on April 9, 1856, the incorporators named being Peter Lyle, George Megee, D. W. C. Baxter, Robert B. Quayle, Jeremiah W. Fritz, F. E. Wilcox, Alfred J. Sellers, John T. Durang, William B. Carlisle, John S. Davis, William P. Davis, David P. Weaver and William Lindsay.

Property was secured on Race Street on the south side, between Fifth and Sixth, 60 feet front and running back 130 feet to Cresson Street. The old houses thereon were torn down, the members of the company, after their daily avocations were through with, going there and working at brick cleaning and cellar digging until far into the night, so great was their enthusiasm and spirit. The undertaking was one of magnitude for those times, a single company to erect a building for its own use costing over $100,000. However, the popularity of the Guards was such that subscriptions poured in. Scrip was issued, and on September 17, 1856, the corner-stone was laid with great ceremonies. On November 16, 1857, with greater ceremonies was the Armory, or, as it was called, National Guards' Hall, formally opened and dedicated. A parade of the militia of the city took place, and in the evening a grand ball was given.

The Second Regiment Organized.

The occupation of the new armory, together with the high reputation of the corps for drill, constantly drew towards it new material. The membership increased at such a rate that it was decided to break from the provisional First Regiment and form the Second Regiment of Militia. This was accomplished, and on December 11, 1860, on its twentieth anniversary, the "Guards" paraded as an eight-company Regiment, with Peter Lyle as Colonel. Just prior to this parade the uniform had again been changed, the pearl coats being of such a delicate shade as to become rapidly discolored, and a uniform of cadet gray adopted. Its general appearance was similar to that worn by the Seventh New York—"swallow tail" coat trimmed with gold and black braid, gray trousers with black stripe and French shako hat.

In the Three Months' Service.

But a short time after the formation of the Second Regiment the mutterings of war filled the air and the people naturally critically scanned the available military forces. Colonel Lyle, ever alive to duty, had been preparing his men, and when the call came offered the Regiment to the Government on April 16, 1861. It was at once accepted, recruiting commenced, and on April 28, but eleven days after acceptance, the Regiment was mustered into the service as the Nineteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers. The same field officers were continued and commissioned, viz.: Colonel, Peter Lyle; Lieutenant-Colonel, D. W. C. Baxter; Major, J. W. Fritz, and Adjutant, H. A. B. Brown. When the books for recruits were opened, men flocked to the armory to enlist, it being considered a personal favor to be accepted as a recruit in such a crack organization. Ten full companies were equipped and many men turned away. On May 14th the orders to march were given, and that evening the Guards formed in Franklin Square. Thousands upon thousands of people congregated to see this pet regiment leave for the front. When Colonel Lyle gave the command "Forward" a mighty roar of cheers broke forth from the enthusiastic multitudes. People ran helter skelter to form in line ahead of the column, and another great crowd brought up the rear. The march was up Chestnut to Broad and to the Baltimore Depot, at Prime Street. All along the route the streets were thronged with people wishing the soldiers "God speed." The Public Ledger of the next day said: "The soldierly bearing of the men elicited one continual cheer from the time they started until they reached the depot. There need be no fear but that the Philadelphia regiment will bring credit to our city."

The regiment proceeded to Locust Point, marching to the neighborhood of Fort McHenry, outside of which it encamped. Its thorough organization and drill as the Second Regiment made it an easy matter for the officers to keep the Nineteenth thoroughly under discipline. Colonel Lyle kept his men at work perfecting them in military exercises, and the Guards were known as one of the best drilled and disciplined regiments in the service. While in camp, General Banks, who commanded the Department of Annapolis, decided to effect the arrest of Marshal Kane, Chief of Police of Baltimore, and assigned Colonel Lyle to that delicate and difficult duty. The Colonel marched eight of his companies at night into the city, placed a number of men from each company, noted as sharpshooters, on either flank upon the sidewalk, arrested everyone met on the street in order to avoid the giving of an alarm, and secured Mr. Kane at his home, without difficulty. The prisoner was at once conveyed to Fort McHenry and incarcerated there. For several days succeeding the event a portion of the regiment was kept on duty in the city.

As the time for the expiration of the three months' service arrived, General Dix, who had succeeded General Banks in command, was in danger of being left without a command. He visited several of the regiments and made appeals to them to remain until other troops relieved them. When he came to the Nineteenth the entire regiment was massed before him. Officers and men were alike anxious to get home, but when the General put the question, "Will you stay?" every man stepped forward and a ringing unanimous "aye" was the response. They were, however, only retained four days beyond their term of enlistment.

They arrived in Philadelphia on the evening of July 31, and were received by an escort composed of the Home Guard Regiments and a committee of prominent citizens. Three days later the regiment paraded and was reviewed by Councils in front of the Custom House.

A Gallant Record in the War.

Immediately upon being mustered out of the three months' service steps were taken to re-enter for "three years or the war," and on August 29th, at a meeting of the regiment, it was unanimously decided to tender its services to the Government. On September 3d notice of its acceptance was received, and the regiment designated as the "Ninetieth," Colonel Lyle retaining command. The other field officers were Lieutenant-Colonel William A. Leech and Major Alfred J. Sellers. David P. Weaver was the Adjutant. At the beginning of December the regiment moved to Camp McClellan, at Nicetown, where, engaged in drill and camp duty, it remained during the winter. On March 31, 1862, the regiment proceeded to Baltimore. Three weeks later it was ordered to Washington, and, after a four days' halt at the Soldiers' Rest, it proceeded to Acquia Creek Landing, where it reported to General McDowell, in command of the Department. From this time on the history of the Ninetieth is the history of the Army of the Potomac. Battle followed battle. March succeeded march. Hardships innumerable were encountered, but the personnel of the regiment, exclusively Philadelphian, was such that in very fight, every movement, the Ninetieth won the encomiums of its superior officers. "Non Sibi, sed Patria," the regimental motto, was proved to be not an unmeaning one. In all, the regiment participated in over thirty engagements, the principal ones being Cedar Mountain, Rappahannock Station, Sulphur Springs, Thoroughfare Gap, Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Fitzhugh House, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, Todd's Tavern, Spottsylvania, Laurel Hill, Guinea Station, North and South Anna, Bethesda Church, Cold Harbor, White Oak Swamp, Petersburg, Jerusalem Plank Road, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Springs, Ream's Station and Hatcher's Run. The report of the battle of the Wilderness contains the following: "We laid under a raking fire for some time, when General Griffin rode up and ordered a charge. Colonel Lyle promptly led his regiment forward, and as soon as it had cleared the shrubbery in front and emerged upon the open field, rebel batteries opened upon it with grape and canister. The order was given to 'double quick,' and, with a shout, it advanced within close range of the rebel lines. From some misunderstanding, or not having received the same peremptory order from General Griffin that he gave the Ninetieth, the rest of the brigade did not advance any distance, leaving the regiment entirely alone in the charge. When Colonel Lyle discovered that he was unsupported he gave the order to 'about face.' What were left rallied around the colors, and under a fierce fire of infantry and artillery returned to their original position. Out of 251 men who started in the charge, 124 were either killed, wounded or captured." In several other fights the command suffered severely, and when it was mustered out in November, 1864, the veteran members being assigned to the Eleventh Reserve, but 21 of the original regiment were left to return home with it.

RECRUITING throughout the Guard is becoming quite brisk in anticipation of the Division taking part in the Presidential inaugural ceremonies at Washington, D. C., March 4th.

THE greatest social military event of the season was the ball of the Eighteenth Regiment (Duquesne Grays), at the Shenley Hotel, Pittsburgh, on January 1st. It was acknowledged to be the finest military reception ever held in Pittsburgh, and was attended by Major-General Charles Miller and staff, General John A. Wiley and staff, and General Hulings and staff, as well as many other prominent officials throughout the State. A nice sum was realized, which the committee proposes turning in to the regimental fund.

COLONEL ROBERT RALSTON of the Third Infantry, in his annual report, suggests that the State pay the men for their attendance at the rifle range, as they are frequently obliged to lose several days from their work before qualifying as marksmen. A prominent brigade staff officer, commenting on this particular clause, thought that the esprit de corps might be lost if pay were allowed the men for this practice. Colonel Ralston, however, thinks that the best patriots are the best paid.

ON January 16th the military ball of the Third Regiment will take place at Horticultural Hall, Philadelphia. While it is held under the auspices of Company "I," it is practically a Regimental event. Acceptances have been received from nearly all the prominent officers of our own State and from six sister States, as well as the District of Columbia. A great feature of the evening's program will be an exhibition drill given by forty picked men from the corps of cadets of the Cheltenham Military Academy, under the command of Major A. D. Sayre, U. S. A.

NEW YORK CITY has appropriated nearly $4,000,000 towards the erection of armories in the city proper; the State of New Jersey has expended over $300,000 for the same purpose, and Maryland has contributed $150,000 to the Fourth and Fifth Regiments, located in the city of Baltimore. In addition to these appropriations, New York city provides from ten to twenty men for each structure, they being carried on the city pay roll as laborers and detached for armory duty. Their pay is from $3.00 to $6.00 per day. It is claimed that in this particular case it means political prestige for Tammany Hall. Be that as it may, it is a great saving for the organizations, and it is doubtful whether they question the political end of it.

Personal Mention

Colonel Logan, who inspected Battery "C," speaks of their passing in review as most excellent.

The spring inspection of Battery "C," which is located at Phoenixville, will take place on Saturday, May 5th, and will be conducted by Colonel Sheldon Potter, Chief of Ordnance.

Battery "A" is doing a lot of quiet hustling and expects to put up a stiff spring inspection. Captain Barclay H. Warburton, the commander of Battery "A" and senior artillery officer of the State, was mustered into the General Egbert Camp of the Spanish-American War Veterans.

Captain Francis M. Bean of Griffin Battery was mustered in at the same time, December 10th, 1900.

Captain Wallace and Lieutenant Reese of Battery "B" seem to be having considerable trouble with Colonel Potter over their inspection rating at Mt. Gretna. Captain Wallace claims that owing to many of his men being ill with cramps on the morning of inspection, he was delayed considerably in reporting on the field, and in his anxiety to get the Battery out on time became a little bit rattled, which is the direct cause of the few minor errors made by the command, the most notable being his failure to prepare the Battery for review.

It is unfortunate that Battery "B" was handicapped in only having two pieces; considerable practice was lost between their arrivel at Mt. Gretna on Friday and the following Tuesday, when their first mounted drill took place. Some comment has been made upon the condition of the pieces; Lieutenant Reese attributes this to not having a jointed rammer, which the State should supply.

New Cars on Philadelphia & Reading New York Trains.

The new parlor cars which have been recently added to the equipment of the Philadelphia & Reading two-hour trains between Philadelphia and New York, were built expressly for this service by the Pullman Company. These trains leave Philadelphia at 7.30 and 8.30 A. M. Returning, leave New York at 4.00 and 4.30 P. M., being solid vestibuled trains throughout. Other fast trains to New York run frequently by this route. Engines burn hard coal; no smoke.

THE SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY.

Not only did the Guards do such service as a regiment, but from it sprang a number of other organizations which, organized by the Second Regiment and officered by its members, made equally famous records in the war, among them being the Philadelphia Fire Zouaves, Colonel D. W. C. Baxter; the Two Hundred and Thirteenth Regiment, Colonel J. A. Gorgas, and the One Hundred and Ninety-sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Harmanus Neff. With the aid of the Union League they also organized a battalion in 1862, commanded by Major J. W. Fritz, and the Fifty-second Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia, Colonel W. A. Gray. In all, it has been computed that more than one thousand officers graduated from the ranks of the "Guards."

Re-Organization After the War.

During all the period of the war the organization had been kept alive at home by those unfit for active service. The armory was successively a recruiting depot and a hospital, and upon the return of the remnant of the Ninetieth steps were taken to again enter the State militia. A meeting was held in August, 1865, and it was decided to re-organize. Colonel Lyle was again selected as commander, and an eight-company regiment formed. The army blue was worn for a short time, and then the old gray uniform was re-adopted. For more than ten years the regiment struggled along, at times surprising and delighting its friends by an old-time display of that esprit du corps for which the Guards had been famous.

The regiment took part in all the ceremonies and parades that occurred during that period, and generally made an excellent display. There was, however, a lack of appreciation shown by the State administration of this old regiment, and it received many hard knocks, one especially unjust action of the authorities being the transfer of the regiment from the First to the Second Brigade, so as to enable another command to secure the right of line on division parades. But, in spite of these rubs, there was a spirit that held the men together, and when the great labor riots of '77 occurred, the members of the Second Regiment were at the fore front, and well held up the honor of their command.

In 1878 Colonel Lyle declined a re-election to the Colonelcy and Robert P. Dechert, then Cornet of the City Troop, was chosen for the position. Colonel Dechert's administration was a most vigorous one. The field and staff were re-organized, companies were mustered out and new ones recruited, and finally the Colonel had the satisfaction of getting authority to increase to a ten-company regiment. The two new companies were rapidly recruited, and from 1880 to the present day the Second Regiment has occupied a leading position in the National Guard of this State. The old gray uniform, being found too costly, was discarded in 1879, and the State uniform is now worn. Colonel Dechert remained in command until August, 1890, when he was promoted to Brigadier-General and Lieutenant-Colonel O. C. Bosbyshell succeeded to the command, making the third commander the regiment has had in 30 years, or the fifth commander of the organization since its inception, a remarkable record in military annals.

The Regiment from 1890 to 1900.

During these ten years the Regiment has remained in excellent condition. The notable events in this period are the partial completion of the new Armory, the service of the Regiment in the Spanish-American war and its increased strength from ten to twelve companies.

June 29, 1891. Lot of ground on west side of Broad Street south of Susquehanna Avenue was purchased for the erection of the new armory.

November 28, 1891. The Board of Trustees of the Armory Fund of the Second Regiment Infantry, National Guard of Pennsylvania, incorporated.

September 19, 1893. Lieutenant-Colonel John Biddle Porter was elected Colonel, succeeding Colonel O. C. Bosbyshell, resigned.

July, 1895. Ground was broken for the erection of the new drill hall.

March 21, 1896. The new drill hall was dedicated and occupied by the Regiment.

April 28, 1898. The Regiment responded to the first call of the President for volunteers and left Philadelphia for Mount Gretna, and volunteers were enrolled in the service of the United States.

May 12 and 13, 1898. The Regiment was mustered into the volunteer army of the United States as the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

May 18, 1898. The Second Battalion left Mount Gretna and took station at Pompton Lakes, New Jersey, to guard the smokeless powder works of the Laflin & Rand Powder Company.

May 19, 1898. Headquarters and the First Battalion left Mount Gretna and took station at Montchanin, Delaware, to guard the Dupont powder works on the Brandywine.

May 25, 1898. The Second Battalion left Pompton Lakes and took station at Pennsgrove, New Jersey, to guard the Dupont smokeless powder works at Carney's Point.

September 6, 1898. The Second Battalion left Pennsgrove, New Jersey, and joined the Regiment at Montchanin, Delaware.

September 15, 1898. The Regiment returned to Philadelphia and was received by the Mayor and city officials and veteran organizations.

The Philadelphia Record said:

"In numbers and general appearance the parade surpassed any yet made by returning troops, the veterans presenting a magnificent appearance in their heavy marching order, with their Merriam packs and blankets and other equipments and accoutrements, including the rifles which they had brought with them. The large companies of 106 men each exhibited perfect files and were a revelation to the spectators, many of whom expressed surprise that such a regiment, which could compare in appearance and form with the best of the regulars, had been ordered to muster out. There was not a single "dead eye" in any file, and the marching of the First Battalion in company front with three sections of fours in the rear, making an L-shaped formation, elicited wild bursts of applause, which were renewed when the Second Battalion came swinging by in platoons."

The Philadelphia Times said:

"It probably did not occur to any one who watched the Second Regiment marching up Broad Street to their Armory at a swinging gait yesterday that a summer's service in camp had had a debilitating effect upon these soldiers. They appeared in the pink of physical condition, and seemed equally ready to storm a battery or make a forced march. However much camp life may have affected the health of other regiments, it did not injure that of the great majority of the members of the Second Pennsylvania Volunteers.

"It is true that this regiment was not sent to Cuba or Porto Rico, or even to Tampa, Chickamauga or Camp Alger, but it has spent a summer in camp doing guard and drill duty without being the worse for either. The secret of its fine condition probably lies in the fact that it had an excellent corps of officers who maintained strict discipline and good sanitary conditions.

"There is good reason for the belief that the enforcement of similar conditions on an adequate scale would have produced similar results at all the camps within the limits of the United States. Yellow fever was not imported, and typhoid and starvation are both preventable under proper administration."

October 26, 1898. The Regiment participated in the Peace Jubilee in Philadelphia.

November 15, 1898. The Regiment was mustered out of the service of the United States.

During its service in the field the Regiment lost but one man by death.

In January and February, 1899, the Regiment was reorganized under command of Captain John T. Hughes, the ranking captain, and mustered into the National Guard of Pennsylvania.

April 21, 1899. Henry T. Dechert, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment, was elected Colonel.

November 23, 1899. Companies L and M (formerly companies A and C of Nineteenth Regiment Infantry, N. G. P.) were attached to the Regiment.

November 24, 1900. The ground was broken for the new front building of the Armory.

December 11, 1900. The corner-stone of the Armory and the sixtieth anniversary of the Regiment celebrated.

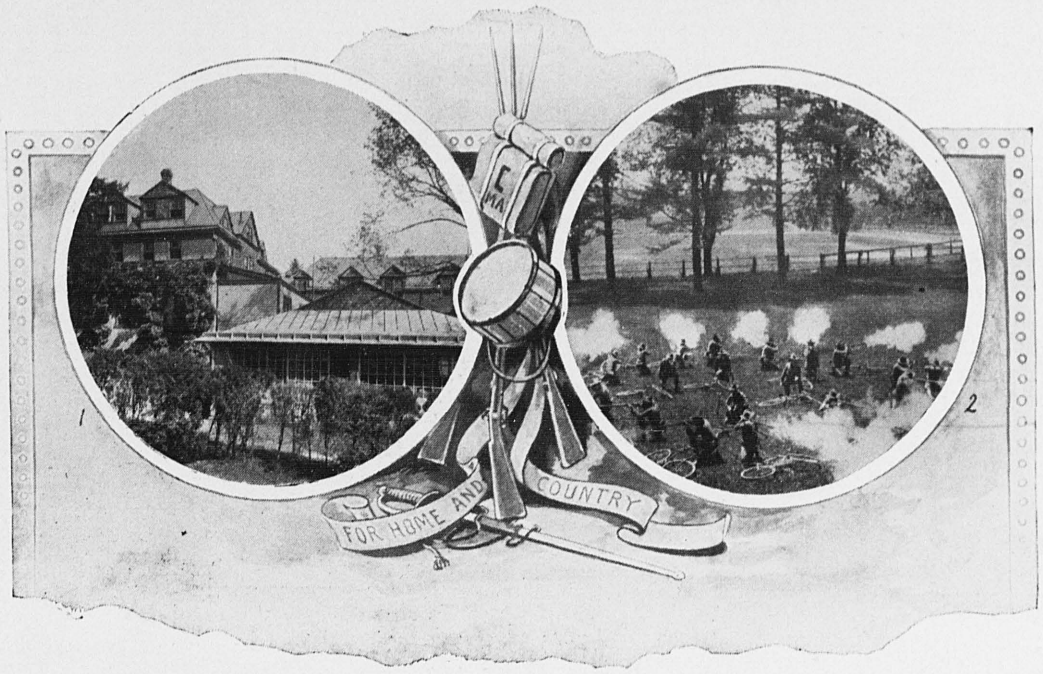
CHELTENHAM MILITARY ACADEMY OGONTZ, PA.

(NEAR PHILADELPHIA)

"AN IDEAL SCHOOL IN AN IDEAL LOCATION"



CHELTENHAM MILITARY ACADEMY, on the summit of the Chelten Hills, near Philadelphia, has a location and environment rarely equaled for beauty and healthfulness. The School was founded twenty-eight years ago by the late Rev. Samuel Clements, D. D., and from its opening has had the best class of patronage and has met with unusual success in the training and education of young men and boys. A majority of its graduates enter leading colleges or scientific schools, and for the past six years its annual representation in such institutions has been equal to one-half the attendance of the school.

Among the features that have contributed to the success and popularity of the Academy, the following will at once commend themselves to judicious parents: 1. The attendance is limited to seventy boarding pupils, in order that the classes may not be so large as to render attention to the individual pupil inconvenient or impossible. 2. Ten resident instructors (an average of one for every seven cadets), selected for their ability and experience and for their willingness to take an interest in the welfare and happiness of the pupils. 3. An honest endeavor to train and educate the whole boy rather than to merely prepare him to pass college entrance examinations. 4. The moral tone and influence of the institution.

Parents seeking the right school for a boy are cordially invited to visit the Academy, or to communicate with the Principal. Rooms are assigned in order of application.

For Illustrated Catalogue address the Principal,
